The House of Life basically mimics the writing style of An Illustrated History. This detailed recount and writing style has been mimicked in future design writing, in order to document every aspect of the interiority of a space. The concept of horror vacui in art is associated with Praz who used the term to refer to cluttered visual interior ...

"The House of Life is, I believe, his masterpiece – a book unlike any other, and a much more complete expression of Mario Praz's sensibility than any of his other books. . . . The apartment is not like a private museum, because it composes a unit, because, like the book which describes it, it is the intimate integument of Praz himself.
