Pierluigi Nicolin: used books -rare books and new books---

Following Gio Ponti and his approach to artistic synthesis expressed through Domus, the magazine which he directed for almost forty years, from 1928 to 1979 (with a break between 1941 and 1947), this year sees the turn of Umberto Riva, sixty years of work ranging from architecture to industrial design, from graphics to interiors, from urban planning to painting, from restoration to museum ...

Umberto Riva: Eulogy to slow design—Domus

Umberto Riva: My initial encounter with architecture was tough. I was especially good at drawing, which is why I was introduced to the discipline in the first place. However, in high school I had studied to become an accountant, quite unsuccessfully.
