What Is Life? The Physical Aspect of the Living Cell is a 1944 science book written for the lay reader by physicist Erwin Schrödinger. The book was based on a course of public lectures delivered by Schrödinger in February 1943, under the auspices of the Dublin Institute for Advanced Studies where he was Director of Theoretical Physics, at Trinity College, Dublin. The lectures attracted an audience of about 400, who were warned "that the subject-matter was a difficult one and that the ...

Erwin Rudolf Josef Alexander Schrödinger (UK: / ɪ ˈ r d ʒ ɪ f ˌ r oʊ ˌ s, ɪ ˈ r e -/; German; 12 August 1887 – 4 January 1961), sometimes written as Erwin Schrodinger or Erwin Schroedinger, was a Nobel Prize-winning Austrian-Irish physicist who developed a number of fundamental results in quantum theory: the Schrödinger equation provides a way to calculate the wave function of a system and how it changes dynamically in time. In addition, he was the author of many works on ...

In a series of lectures at the Institute, Schrödinger addressed the phenomenon of life from the point of view of physics, and from first principles explained how genetic information might be stored in a molecule, and how life in many ways appeared to defy the second law of thermodynamics - unlike everything else in the universe life somehow becomes more ordered rather than the other way round.

The Schrodinger Equation is a linear partial differential equation that is used to describe the wave or state function of a quantum-mechanical system, an interesting Erwin Schrodinger fact. Schrodinger made the discovery in 1925 and it would be this would propel him to go on to win a Nobel Prize less than a decade later.
